

Centering Black Women

in HIV Prevention: Advancing Equitable Access to PrEP

There is a significant disparity in PrEP use among Black women who are at a disproportionate risk for HIV but have much lower PrEP uptake compared to other groups.

At the end of this activity, participants should be better able to:

- Examine the main factors contributing to the limited adoption of PrEP among Black cisgender women at risk for HIV.
- Identify provider–patient communication barriers that reduce PrEP awareness, trust, and uptake.
- Apply evidence-based strategies and culturally responsive interventions to increase PrEP utilization among Black cisgender women.
